I have searched the internet and tried several ways of doing this, including with notepad++, but I couldn't find a way to get the contents of the file opened in a browser. It just opens the text file on notepad. So what I want is that the text file is opened in a browser, where I am able to select what I want to search for, type it and be able to select all the rows where the string is found. In the end, I will get all the lines with that specific text in it. Is this possible to do? Thank you in advance. A: If you want to open it in a browser, then you need to use a different approach. The easiest way is to use file_get_contents() and use the DOMDocument in PHP5. $string = file_get_contents('file.txt'); $doc = new DOMDocument(); $doc->loadHTML($string); Then you can use PHP's DOMDocument functions. Once upon a time... If I remember correctly it was some time around 1990 when my friends started taking me to Michael's very first Monday night "open mic" that he started at time. They were all new to the music and I was very much in the same place. I'd listen to the local and national radio while sitting in the laundromat watching the guy spin the clothes. I remember only one radio station in my area was doing this kind of thing and they weren't playing much rock music and they weren't local either. Soon after that the local newspaper started having shows that were open to local acts playing instruments. That seemed to have a lot more opportunities for me to play out and from that point on, I began making a much greater effort to try and go to as many shows as possible. I went to the "Worcester music show" (a local radio station) most weeks and finally I was going to get some recognition 82157476af
